DOUBLE-DUTY—President Eisenhower stopped off enroute to the Central Intelligence Agency cornerstone-laying ceremonies yesterday to cut the ribbon opening a new stretch of the George Washington Memorial Parkway, a route that will provide access to the CIA site in Langley. With him are Roger C. Erist, Assistant Secretary of Interior; Conrad L. Wirth, National Park Service Director; Rep. Joel T. Broyhill (R., Va.), and Harry T. Thompson, National Capital Parks Superintendent. But even before the Parkway had been open an hour there was a traffic jam at Key Bridge. And highway officials said it'll probably get worse until something is done about Rosslyn Circle and its bottleneck into the District. At right, the coatless President, with CIA Director Allen Dulles beside him, reads the inscription on the new building's cornerstone. The headquarters is expected to be completed in 1961.
